- Gain increased safety and tactical advantage over opponents by learning practical ways to transition between self-defense tactics to subject control holds.
- Better protect yourself by learning to effectively use hands, elbows, knees and feet for personal protection.

This program is designed for public safety officers who deal with conflict or potential violence. This includes corporate security, federal, state and local law enforcement organizations, contract security companies, academic or healthcare law-enforcement and security, corrections, military police, probation and parole, bail enforcement, and executive protection.

This program is taught by leading experts who have real-world experience in both psychomotor skill programs and field applications for those skills. The class will provide the student with necessary information to return to his/her agency and, as that agency's instructor, develop and conduct a specialized program designed around the agency's exact operational needs in the area of self-defense and subject-control tactics.
